Research project	An unexplored case of relationships between Le Marche and France in Fifteenth-Century Europe: the itinerarium of Girolamo da Matelica, hermit and humanist in the footsteps of Petrarch. With a critical digital edition of his unpublished work De vita solitaria .
Description	The project will investigate the intellectual itinerarium of Girolamo da Matelica, a hermit and humanist to whom the famous Florentine bookseller Vespasiano da Bisticci dedicated a lengthy biographical profile, recalling his origins from Le Marche region, his education in Paris, and his arrival (at least from 1457 onwards) at the Badia Fiesolana, where he became an active copyist in its service. He produced a dozen codices for him, remarkable both for the quality of the texts transmitted (especially Church Fathers and humanistic translations from Greek) and for their artistic value, the result of collaboration with the leading craftsmen of the time. The project will also provide a philological-literary and historical study of Girolamo's De vita solitaria , an ascetic-spiritual treatise that remained unpublished so far, with the aim of highlighting, for the first time, the relationships between this work - clearly recalling to Petrarch - and the wide range of authors and texts that Girolamo had the opportunity to read, study and transcribe.
